

Contents

List of Illustrations	vii
Foreword. Culturing Emergent Bodies Rosemary A. Joyce	xii
Acknowledgments	xxi
Introduction. Toward a Culturing of the Paleolithic Body April Nowell and Benjamin Collins	1
Chapter 1. Enveloping Oneself in Others: Semiotic, Spatial, and Temporal Dimensions of Ostrich Eggshell Bead Use in Southern Africa Peter J. Mitchell and Brian A. Stewart	9
Chapter 2. Manufacturing Social Landscapes: Bead Production, Exchange, and Social Connections at Grassridge Rockshelter, South Africa Benjamin Collins, Amy Hatton, April Nowell, and Christopher J. H. Ames	41
Chapter 3. Perspectives on Stone Age Sociality: A New Role for Ostrich Eggshell Beads Jennifer M. Miller	68
Chapter 4. A Shell Bead from a Faraway Ocean: Significance Assessment of a Single Indigenous Ornament from Southern Australia Keryn Walshe	87
Chapter 5. Building Identities and Social Organization throughout the Early Holocene: Interpreting the Personal Adornments of the Last Hunter-Gatherers in Portugal Lino André	110

Chapter 6. Beads on the Edge of the World: Atlantic Identity and Sociality during the Upper Paleolithic of Western Iberia Nuno Bicho and Lino André	132
Chapter 7. Constructing Identity: Body Decoration and Modification in the Swabian Aurignacian Ewa Dutkiewicz, Sibylle Wolf, Elizabeth C. Velliky, and Nicholas J. Conard	160
Chapter 8. What's in a Color? Ochre Use in the Middle Stone Age of Southern Africa Tammy Hodgskiss	208
Chapter 9. The Best Dressed Hominin: Clothing, Tanning, and Textile Production in the Paleolithic April Nowell and Aurora Skala	236
Conclusion. Culturing Bodies in the Past: Similarities across Diversity Benjamin Collins and April Nowell	275
Index	289